Whether you're throwing a disco-themed party, rock 'n' roll sock hop, or just a children's party where you'll have music and space to dance, these dance party games are sure to get kids moving and grooving in the spirit of fun. Spruce up your dance party game, you will need one person to work in the spotlight and another to work music. If this person stand in the middle of the dance floor and wither the flashlight on the dancers. The spotlight man has to constantly move the flashlight so that it always changes what kind of dancer is singling out. Whenever the person in charge of the music stops him., the spotlight holder should freeze, stabilizing the light on the dancer he was pointing at at the time. This dancer is out of the game. The game continues until there is only one dancer left. Another variation of this game is to let the dancer light shine when the music stops moving to the center of the dance floor and perform their best dance moves for the crowd. Thus, no one is excluded from the game and everyone gets a turn to shine in the spotlight. To play memory moves so children form a circle around the dance floor. Choose one player to go first. This player will step into the center of the circle and make up the dance move. The next player will step into the center and repeat the same dance move. The player then mimics the dance move of the first player, then performs one of his own. It's up to the next player to repeat both dance moves and add a third. The game continues in a way that each dancer repeats and then add a new step to the list. Someone who can't copy or forget the sequence of dance moves comes out. The game continues until there is only one dancer left. This game will have team dancers in pairs. Each couple should dance only in a designated place. The best way to do this is to tape big circles on the floor and the dancers stand on them to start. Play music and make them dance together without leaving circles. When you speed up the music, they have to speed up your dance. Anytime the foot steps out of the couple's seat, that couple is out of the game. To make this game more challenging, you can start with larger circles and replace them with smaller ones as the dance progresses. Assign one player to stand in the middle of the dance floor and hold the flag. The rest of the dancers form pairs and start dancing around the flag holder. At random times, the flag holder will put the flag in the air. When the flag goes up, everyone switches partners. The flag holder should also try to find a partner. The person left alone becomes the new flag holder. Play music and kids dance randomly. Stand next to the dance floor and randomly evoke different dance styles such as disco, square dance, ballroom, hip hop or ballet. Whenever a new style of dance is called, players switch your dance moves according to this style. Forget macarena or a roller coaster. Make kids reinvent dance dance They line up as they will for the line dance. One by one, there is a player step forward and make a move. All dancers will work on this step several times before the next player adds a move. Each step will be practiced along with those that have gone before. By the time all the players have added and rehearsed their movements, a new dance will be invented. Give away two or three hats to the dancers. As music plays hats should circulate among the dancers. Every time the music stops, the players in hats earn a prize. To make sure everyone earns a prize, there are players who win to sit for the remainder of the dance game. Before the party, write down a few things that may apply to party guests, such as a girl with a ponytail or a man with glasses. Put all the written items in the hat. As the kids dance, pull the items out of the hat and call them out loud. Anyone who fits the description should leave the dance floor. The last player on the dance floor wins. Take four corners with four different colors. This can be done by hanging a colored flag or taping a piece of colored paper on the floor in each corner. Write down four colors and place them in a hat. Once the kids are dancing a bit, stop the music and tell them to run into the corner. Get one of the flowers out of the hat. These players are out and that angle is out of the game. This version of musical chairs is a great way to incorporate your favorite childhood game into your dance party. Instead of lining the chairs in the middle of the room, set them so that they circle (or semicircle) the dance floor. The kids dance, and when the music stops, they head to the chairs, but instead of running, they should dance their way to the chairs. As usual, the player is left standing when all the chairs are taken removed, the chair is removed, and the children return to the dance floor for the next round. This site is not available in your country svetikdGetty Images You should know that now we love a little organized fun. From the best drinking games to home party games for adults, anything that involves forcing something competitive on our friends and family? We're in this. That's where these dinner party games come in. Whether you're over a 1920s themed murder mystery or a good old-fashioned post-it-on-the-head situation, we have a dinner party game for you. Great Minds Think AlikeGive every member of your party piece post-it notes. Take it one by one to ask a question to which everyone writes their answer on one of The Post-Its. The goal of the game is to try to match your response with the other people in the group, a bit like the opposite of Pointless. Every time you get the same answer, you win a point, and the person with the highest point at the end wins. The questions could be anything from a celebrity you would spend the night with a person in your group who can't keep them drinking - the more obscure the better! Who said that? This one takes a bit of planning, but so is it worth it. If you're hosting, take some time to go through each of your facebook profiles, and find some embarrassing status updates from years ago. Screenshot and print them out, making sure not to include who posted them, and make everything at your party guess who wrote what. Depending on how far back you go - and what people have shared - it can be quite hilarious. After dinner Lucky Dip Game, created for two or more people. After Dinner encourages everyone at the table to create their own night quiz at home. With testing issues and various challenges, players should test each other's knowledge of everything from celebrities to geography. The game involves articulate style issues, challenges players to rank points and encourages all kinds of stupidity. Back to BackThis one is essentially a drinking game because they can be a dinner party game too, right? After dinner, ask your party to take it one by one to stand back to back with each other. Ask the couple a question about the Most likely style, and whoever thinks it's them should drink. If both sides are drinking, they both should drink again. If neither drink, they should also both drink. Deadly. The questions can range from Who takes longer to prepare in the morning? Up to, you know, more wild. The Big Potatoes Obama Lama is like a classic game to articulate, but even more silly thanks to the content of the cards. The Big Potatoes Obama Lama asks players to describe, act and tackle the rhyme charades. Act or describe more than 500 sentences while your team tries to guess as many sentences as possible. From King Kong playing ping pong to pot noodles to marrying poodles, they're pretty funny. CategoryEach party member gets to choose a category and then players take it in turns to name something that fits into that category around the table by working through the alphabet. For example, if someone tells an animal, walking on a table will be something like - an anteater, a bear, a cat, a dog ... until someone thinks of one thing. Another version of this game does not follow the alphabet, and players should think about something that corresponds to a category that starts with the last letter of the previous player's word. Using the example of animals, this will go something like - Ant-Man, Rattlesnake, Elephant, Tadpole. Who am I? For some good old-fashioned fun, all you need is some sticky notes and a sharpie pen. Each player writes the name of a celebrity on his sticky note, and glues it on the person to his left head. Bypassing the table, everyone gets to ask a yes or no question in an attempt to guess who is stuck on their head. Murder Mystery There's Nothing Better Than Some Good Old-Fashioned Organized Fun, which is where murder mystery inches throw a 1930s dinner party to go along with this which gives everyone a Cluedo style character and has three alternative endings - so you can plan the night games over and over again. Make a RuleUpon arrival at the dinner table, ask each party member to make the rule. It can be anything from not using names to just drink with your right hand. Every time someone breaks the rule and gets yelled at, they have to make a fore. The trick is to make your rule difficult, but not that hard people actually don't do it. For example, not making eye contact or no one can use cutlery sounds fun in theory, but will be scrapped within the first minute. Good old-fashioned quizWhy you're celebrating someone's birthday or festive season on you, assign a master quiz to come up with a good old-fashioned quiz. Create themed rounds so everyone can feel involved - whether it means questions about the people at your party, a year passed or little things based on shared memories. Side note: We are not responsible for any competitive outbursts. Voting Game Voting Game poses questions to your party, which then give the opportunity to anonymously submit your answer. Sneaky bit? The questions will be about the other people at the table. Sample questions: Who will be the hardest to learn in the last 10 years? Who's going to lose the election because of what they did in high school? Whose Google search history would you most like to see? It's sure to start conversations. Consider the fun, organized.
